This, Mitchell alleges, is what is going on with Nexium, a drug that has been off-patent for almost two years. If that's it, then that's it. For the insurance companies and employers, they help manage prescription claims. It's important to know that not all medications, brand name or generic, work the same for all patients, which is why it is important for healthcare providers and patients to determine the best treatment option on an individual basis. But that's exactly what they're doing, and it's driving some decades-old family businesses around the country to the brink. The payer pays more in the end, the patient pays a higher copay or higher cost of the medication, and the rebates may or may not go back to the ultimate payer. There's also a prescription version with twice the strength. And the generic competition means the company's revenue from Nexium is falling. Because of Meridian's pricing model, Miller is willing to show his clients exactly how much he makes off of every drug. And, because some of their fees are pegged to the drug's price, the PBMs can actually profit from higher prices too. In the case of acid reflux, the drug in question is Nexium, and it serves as an illustration of the pharmacists' chief complaint. Pharmacies already compete for customers and business, let's not set a precedent to make them compete for reimbursement by insurance companies as well. YouTube Meanwhile, in Washington Pharmacists aren't the only ones concerned about the lack of transparency. I was born with it tilted the wrong way, so stomach acid was moving up through my esophagus and over time it wore away the lining to the point that my esophagus collapsed in three places. Unexpectedly, because most of the time patients don't know how much drugs cost insurers, they just know what they have to pay as a co-pay. Here's how the doughnut hole happens: Thomson Reuters Doughnut holes The real danger of taking Nexium, at least for millions of Medicare Part D patients, is that it can put them in something called a doughnut hole. But some smaller PBMs manage far fewer formularies than the big three, which is to say they have fewer, and usually smaller, clients. Other clients are just flat out suing. Interestingly enough, these are also the fastest growing part of Rx drug plans.
