Calcitriol Topical pronounced as kal" si trye' ol. Call your doctor if you have any unusual problems while you are using this medication. Do not apply calcitriol ointment to healthy skin or anywhere on your face, eyes, lips, or vagina.

Calcitriol ointment is used to treat mild to moderate psoriasis a skin disease in which red, scaly patches form on some areas of the body. To protect young children from poisoning, always lock safety caps and immediately place the medication in a safe location one that is up and away and out of their sight and reach. Unneeded medications should be disposed of in special ways to ensure that pets, children, and other people cannot consume them. Keep this medication in the container it came in, tightly closed, and out of reach of children. It works by helping to stop the production of extra skin cells that may build up and form scales on the skin and by decreasing the activity of immune cells in the skin.

Before using calcitriol ointment, tell your doctor and pharmacist if you are allergic to calcitriol, any other medications, or any of the ingredients in calcitriol ointment. It is usually applied two times a day, in the morning and evening. Also tell your doctor if your psoriasis is being treated with phototherapy a treatment for psoriasis that involves exposing the skin to ultraviolet [UV] light.
